

as ~. These may be regarded as the spirants of Kavarga and Paravarga respectively.

§ 7. Some consonants are pronounced with a slight aspiration and are designated as Alpa-prāṇa, while others which are pronounced with a stronger aspiration are called Mahā-prāṇa. The first and third letters of each class, the nasals and the semi-vowels belong to the first class; the rest belong to the second class. For the sake of convenience the first and third letters of each class are sometimes called "unaspirates."

§ 8. In the following table is given a complete classification of these letters according to the organs with which they are pronounced.

(a) The organs of pronunciation are the five parts situated in the mouth, viz, the throat, the palate, the roof or upper part of the palate, the teeth and the lips.

Note.—In the following table the nether stroke (see § a 10 below) is omitted. It should be supposed to be present.

	The Five Classes.					Semi-vowels.	Sibilants.	Simple vowels St Lg.	Dip-thongs.
	Unaspirate	Aspirate.	Unaspirate	Aspirate.	Nasals.

Labials.	प	फ	ब	भ	म		Upa. उ, ऊ	...

* ऌ though not a semivowel is put here as it is a guttural.

This can be more easily remembered from its Sanskrit form which is as follows :—

अकुहविसर्जनीयां कण्ठः ।	।: कण्ठतालु ।
इचुयशानां तालु ।	ओदौतोः कण्ठौष्ठम् ।
ऋटुरषाणां मूर्धा ।	वकारस्य दन्तौष्ठम् ।
लतुलसानां दन्ताः ।	जिह्वामूलीयस्य जिह्वामूलम् ।
उपपद्माननीयानां ओष्ठौ ।	नासिकाऽनुस्वारस्य
जमढणनानां नासिका च ।

The linguals are called cerebrals in some European Grammars. ए and ऐ are both guttural and palatal; ओ and औ are guttural and labial; व is dental and labial. The nose is the organ of pronunciation of the Anusvāra, while the root of the tongue is that of the Jihvāmūliya.

§ 9. Those letters are called सवर्ण or homogeneous whose place of pronunciation is the mouth and the effort required to pronounce them is the same or equal.* Letters which are not सवर्ण or similar are called असवर्ण or heterogeneous.

§ 10. A svara or vowel is that which can be pronounced without the help of any other letter; a vyāñjana or consonant is that which is pronounced with the help of a vowel. The consonants, therefore, are written with a slanting nether stroke to denote their imperfect character.

(a) Hence the consonants are given, in the system of Pāṇini, with an अ added to them for the sake of pronunciation.

(b) As already remarked, there are no separate names for

* तुल्यास्यप्रयत्नं सवर्णम् । Pāṇ. I. 1. 9.
